Modern Technologies we were reminded of when reading the Veldt:

When reading the Veldt I was reminded of ^{many of} the modern technologies ^{such as TVs, phones, and VR} we have today. The main issue with the technologies in the Veldt is not the fact that they are present and coexisting with humans, it's the fact that they are being excessively used and replacing essential parts of a traditional family such as parenting. Similarly, when any of the modern technologies such as TVs, phones, or VR are overused in the day to day life, they become more of a step back that leads to human degeneracy rather than advancement.

~~Parents~~ Many parents these days use technology to parent for them, rather than putting in the actual work and parent themselves. ~~The~~ Similar to the Veldt, the lack of a parent present in the lives of these children would only cause the child to grow up to hate the parents that only want to take away the technologies they ~~of~~ carelessly give in the first place. It is essential that good parenting goes into children from the moment they were born.
