Purpose is the main objective or aim of a writing piece. There are three main objectives of writing, to inform, to ~~entertain~~, and to ~~persuade~~ or to persuade, or to express.

In "What Should We Call The Sixth of January?", one of the objectives of this article is to inform the readers, the New Yorker audience of the events that occurred on Jan 6.

Through the opening paragraphs of the article, the author presents ~~background~~ information about ~~the events~~ what happened on Jan 6. As the article progresses, the author commences to work her opinion into the text, stating that when naming the incident on Jan 6, "to steer very clear of enabling it."

Overall, the purpose of this text is to inform the audience about the incident on Jan 6, and to imply the morally accepted opinion about that incident.
